ABOUT MOONSHINERS

INGENIOUS LAWBREAKERS WHO ARE THE LAZIEST OF MEN.

Prisoners Ran a Still in Jail With a Coffee Pot and Corn Bread-An Offender Who Was Not Utterly Depraved After All.

From the New York Evening Sun.

The moonshiners of the mountains of North Carolina are rotoriously ignorant and shiftless. They rival the Georgia crackers in laziness and general worthlessness, but judged by the standards of the South they possess one redeeming characteristic. In their own vocation of distilling whisky they are unexcelled both in the quality of their product and the ingenuity displayed in adapting means to their end. Certain and Northern Georgia are held by them in possession disputed only by the occasional perfunctory raids of the government of-ficers. Persons arrested on the charge of mainperfunctory raids of the government officers.

Persons arrested on the charge of maintaining illicit distilleries are arraigned in tig federal courts, and many of them are to the court in Atlanta, Ga.
Juge Newman of Atlanta has probably had as long and varied an experience with the moanshiners as any judge of the federal courts, and tells many stories of his dealings with them.

"The first gang of moonshiners ever brought before me," said the judge recently, while recounting his experience to a friend, "was in "12. The evidence against them was clear, and I sentenced them to six menths' imprisonment. After a few days as they showed no inclination to be troublesome, they had some freedom about the jall and used to gather in one of the larger cells to discuss questions of interest only to themselves. One day the keeper noticed unmistakable fumes of whisky in the cell as well as an unwonted hilarity among the moonshiners. As the strictest watch had been kept to exclude all liquor from the jall the keeper was completely mystified to account for the presence of the whisky.
Several times within the first two months of their imprisonment the mountaineers showed plainly the effects of whisky, although they had had no intercourse with the outside world. At length, during one of his tours of inspection, the keeper stumbled across a store of corn bread and a coffee pot hidden in a cavity of the wall, where several loose bricks had been dislodged.

"Would you believe it? Those moonshiners had actually constructed a miniature still out of a coffee pot, and as the corn bread which was given them was rarely cooked through, had learned to make whisity from their bread." A twinkle in the dudge's eye cast the shadow of a doubt upon the entire veracity of his story, but in a more serious manner he continued: "You may take that story for what it is worthbut an incident happened last fall in my dealings with the moonshiners which I can vouch for in every particular.

"An old mountaineer of the name of Joe Hick

in a spirit of curiosity I called at the prison to see him.

"Now, the mountaineers, as a class, can neither read nor write, and Joe was no exception, yet in some way he had received word that his only son was dying in the North Carolina mountains, 140 miles away, and had expressed a wish to see him. In his rough way he implored me to grant him leave of absence for two weeks, and he would return without fail at the end of that time. He said that he had just money enough to carry him home and bring him back, and would gladly serve another year for the short leave. As a rule, I am not in the habit of paying much attention to such requests, but somehow old Joe impressed requests, but somehow old Joe impressed me with his sincerity, and I procured his release on parole for two weeks.

"He was to report to me in court on a Tuesday, and I can recall the day as plainly as yesterday. Court was to close at 3 o clock in the afternoon, and as the old clock showed five minutes of that hour I began to wonder if old Joe had deceived me after all, and as the clock struck 3 I had formed a resolution never to be moved in the future by the most pitiful of prayers. Just as I gave the order to adjourn court and close the doors a figure came stumbling in that I shall prace to the court of the and close the doors a figure came stumbling in that I shall never forget. At first I did not recognize him, but as he dragged himself toward me and said, 'Wai, here I be, jedge.' I saw that it was old Joe. Faithful to his word, he had returned, but I have never since seen a man in such a con lothes were nearly torn from him, and his bare feet were cut and bruised until he could hardly stand. His long hair was matted and hung in ropes down over his pallid learned afterward that he had arrived his cabin in the mountains just in time see his boy before he died, and had at his last cent to give him a burial. He spent his last cent to gave min a build miles had then started out to walk the 140 miles over the mountains and through the woods back to Atlanta, and had arrived on time the was ill for a month as he had promised. He was ill for a month after that, but those old mossbacks never if they live to grow up, and he rec I had a chance to make a recom dation for executive clemency to the go cantion for executive clemency to the gov-ernor soon afterward and I procured the release of Joe Hicks."

After a pause the judge said slowly:
"You can say what you will about degen-eracy and natural deprayity, but that one act of that old, civilized moonshiner gave me more hope for the race than all the sermons I ever heard."
